COMPANY L TO BE PART OF TROOP OF CAVALRY

Transferred with Lock Haven and Sunbury Companies.

MAY GO TO MEXICO

Captain Brown Receives Orders to Recruit Local Company to 150 Enlisted Men—Directed to Take Only Best Material Available.

CompanyIL, Twelfth Regiment Infantry, stationed at Bellefonte, has been detached from the Infantry and transferred to the cavalry branch of the Pennsylvania National Guard. The work of turning the local company into a troop of cavalry will be hurried through with as rapidly as possible in order to be in readiness for immediate service should peace plans fail to terminate the Mexican situation.

In addition to the Bellefonte guardsmen Company H, of Lock Haven, and Company E. of Sunbury, also have been transferred to the cavalry service. The three new troops will be under the command of Major Fetzer, of Sunbury. The Bellefonte troop will be commanded by Captain W. H. Brown. The Lock Haven troop will be under Captain Poorman, while the Sunbury troop will be commanded by Captain Charles E. Clement.

Captain Brown on Tuesday received orders from Brigadier General Charles M. Clement to immediately recruit the Bellefonte company up to 150 men. Prior to receipt of this announcement had been made from Harrisburg that the three companies had been transferred to the cavalry service. With cavalrymen in demand the new troop to be recruited here will in all likelihood see service in Mexico at an early date if President Wilson gives the word to open fire on Huerta and his forces.

The orders received by Captain Brown from Brigadier General Clement follow:

1. In the event of a call for troops in connection with the Mexican situation, your company will be immediately detached from the 12th Infantry and transferred to the cavalry arm of the service.

2. Acting on this information, you will at once proceed to recruit your company to maximum strength, and secondly to secure a waitinglist of men upon whom you can lay your hands at the time of the call to raise the strength of your command to 150 enlisted men. This list should be selected from the best material upon which you can get your hands.

3. A copy of this communication is furnished to the Commanding Officer 12th Infantry.

C. M. CLEMENT,
Brigadier General.

Captain Brown has already begun the work of recruiting additional men. To be qualified to enlist one must be of good physical condition, between the ages of 18 and 45 years, must stand at least 5 feet 4 inches high, and must be of good moral character. Applicants for enlistment who are under 21 years must have the written consent of parents or guardians.

Since last week's issue of the "The Republican" the most important development in the Mexican situation was the proposal of Argentina, Brazil and Chile to serve as mediators in efforts to effect peace, which offer was accepted by both President Wilson and Huerta. The draft of suggestions is now being prepared but likely will not be ready to be submitted to the President and Huerta before the end of the week. Meanwhile the United States is going ahead with preparations for war. General Funston is in charge of a brigade of 5,000 men at Vera Cruz. Several thousand additional marines are enroute to Vera Cruz and Tampico.

Little hope is entertained that mediation will be successful. Huerta, it is suspected, is merely playing for additional time to strengthen himself. Meanwhile American refugees are leaving Mexico. In the event that the peace plan fails it is expected that President Wilson will be authorized to call for volunteers, in which event National Guard troops from Pennsylvania, New York and a dozen other States will be sent to the front. Anticipating such a call National Guard commanders in these States are getting things in readiness for active service.

While no public declaration has been made as to what President Wilson will demand it is generally understood in Washington that his schedule will call for the elimination of Huerta. This, it believed, will prove to be the stumbling block in efforts to bring about peace. The fact that Huerta personally was objectionable to President Wilson for the last year, and that he selected all through that period not to retire, is regarded as the best evidence that he is not likely now to do what he could have done more gracefully at any time in the last twelve months.

CANDIDATES INTERVIEWED

Asked to Declare Themselves on Proposed Temperance Legislation.

To help the Temperance people of Centre County know the views and purposes of the men who are seeking the several nominations in the different political parties questions were sent out a few days since. In these questions men running for Congress were asked to declare whether they would work for and vote for the pending joint resolution, known as the Sheppard Hobson resolution; or one similar to it. This is the resolution which would give to the states the opportunity to amend the national constitution, and thereby forever prohibit the manufacture for sale, etc. of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage. In a word it means National Prohibition. Then those running for the State-senate, and for the lower house of the General Assembly, were asked to declare that they would be for the temperance legislation introduced by the temperance people, and against the anti-temperance legislation that others might introduce. Answers have been received from almost all men who are running. Some who announced themselves at the last moment have not been reached yet by the communications; but they will be, and their positions made known later.

The tabulation, and classification of the men of the parties as given below. "Dry" means that they promise what we asked. "Wet" means that they do not promise what we ask. "Doubtful" means that their answers are not clear cut, and positive.

CANDIDATES FOR CONGRESS.

Charles H. Rowland, Philipsburg, Pa. Republican. Dry.

CANDIDATES FOR STATE-SENATE.

A. A. Dale, Bellefonte, Pa. Republican. Dry.

C. C. Hoover, DuBois, Pa. Republican. Dry.

ASSEMBLY.

Cephas L. Gramley, Rebersburg, Pa. Republican. Dry.

Harry B. Scott, Philipsburg, Pa. Republican. No time for reply.

I have in my possession the original letters from nearly all of these gentlemen. In one or two instances I have copies of their letters. Any person, or persons, interested in their fuller statements can have access to these letters.

We have not interviewed the candidates for the governorship, or the higher courts, or the United States senate. Men higher up in the state temperance organization are learning the views and purposes of these gentlemen, and are letting the public know what to expect. It is well understood that Mr. Brumbaugh, Republican, Mr. Vance McCormick, Democrat, and Mr. Lewis, Washington, are all announced to be in favor of the sort of temperance legislation in this state that the temperance people are working for. These men are candidates for the governorship. Dimnick, Palmer, and Pinchot, for their several parties, are announced as openly right on the national question. I haven't seen any statements that would justify one saying anything about the men running for the higher court positions.

It augurs a good, healthy condition of mind on the temperance question, that so many of the men seeking the nominations are unhesitatingly out-spoken in behalf of the temperance legislation the temperance people want. A supplemental report will be made through the medium of this paper, giving the views and promises of any other candidates not named above; or the statements of those named, but not reported.

G. E. HAWES,
President of the Bellefonte Temperance Society.

Note:—The editor of "The Republican" has assumed the responsibility of eliminating from the foregoing article the names of all candidates who have not formally announced themselves in this newspaper. This is done in justice to those candidates whose announcements appear in "The Republican."

Marriage Licenses.

Register J. Frank Smith has issued the following marriage licenses:

Anthony G. Noll Annie G. Sommers	Bellefonte. "
Henry Knoffsinger Lydia Kreamer	Pleasant Gap. "
James J. Clarke Katherine L. DeLaney	Greensburg. Centre Hall.

Family of Five Burned.

Four children and their mother were cremated in a fire of unknown origin which destroyed the home of Peter Varner, at Mount Union, about 10.30 o'clock Monday night. The dead are: Mrs. Mildred Kelly Varner, aged 26, Elmer Simon Varner, aged 9, Ruth Elizabeth Varner, aged 6, Albert Lewis Varner, aged 4, Francis May Varner, aged 2.

SENATOR PENROSE TO SPEND TWO DAYS HER

To Visit State College and Bellefonte May 14th.

AT SNOW SHOE ON 15TH

Senior United States Senator Arranges for Tour of Centre County in Advance of Primaries—First Visit in Several Years.

United States Senator Boies Penrose will visit Centre County next month, his schedule calling for a two-day visit. His plans are to be here Thursday and Friday, May 14th and 15th. On the 14th he will spend the afternoon at State College, coming to Bellefonte in the evening. On the 15th he will go to Snow Shoe in the morning, his itinerary taking him to Philipsburg in the evening. Just what plans are being made for him during his two-day tour through the county is not known at this time.

The visit of the senior United States Senator will be the first he has made to Centre County since his appearance at State College at Pennsylvania Day exercises several years ago, at which time he delivered an address to the students. He is well known personally to many residents of the county. His brother, Dr. Charles B. Penrose, one of the leading physicians in Philadelphia, is known to quite a number of the medical profession in Bellefonte and other points in the county.

Dissatisfaction in business circles throughout the State has contributed greatly to the strength of Senator Penrose's candidacy for re-election. This condition is particularly true of the coal mining sections of the State, which two years ago were regarded as hostile to Penrose. Friends of Senator Penrose attribute the growth of sentiment in his favor to his firm and aggressive advocacy of a return to the protective tariff system, the need of which is being felt more and more each day in the great industrial centers.

Hoy—Houck.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at WarriorsMark at the Methodist parsonage by Rev. Rebock, Wednesday evening, April 22d, at 8 o'clock, the contracting parties being Miss M. Pearl Hoy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Hoy, of Bellefonte, and John C. Houck, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Houck, of Pine Grove Mills.

The beautiful ring ceremony was used. The bride was attended by Mrs. George Kustunbauder, sister of the groom, as bridesmaid. The groom was attended by George Kustunbauder, as best-man.

The bride was dressed in white voile and the bridesmaid wore white to match. After the ceremony they were served with refreshments, and while enjoying that, the calithumpians called.

After a short Loneymoon tour they returned to the home of the bride, where a reception was tendered them. Only the immediate families were present. We wish them a long and prosperous life, on the sea of matrimony.

Verdict Sustained.

In the State Superior Court this week a decree was handed down affirming the Centre County Court in the case of J. A. Bitner vs. W. H. Gardner. Both principals in the case reside in Liberty township. Mr. Bitner sold a horse to Mr. Gardner. Subsequently the latter claimed that the horse was a kicker and had died from self-inflicted injuries. He brought suit to recover from Mr. Bitner and in the Centre County Court was awarded a verdict of $125. Mr. Bitner appealed from this and took the case to the Superior Court, only to again lose out.

Fred Kurtz Lands Plum.

Editor Fred Kurtz, of the Lewisburg "Journal," has been named postmaster of Lewisburg. His name was sent to the Senate last week after having been recommended by Congressman Dershem. He is a son of the late Frederick Kurtz and a brother of Surveyor of the Port Charles R. Kurtz, editor of the "Centre Democrat," of this place. Before locating at Lewisburg he resided at Centre Hall He is well known in Bellefonte.

Amos Crain Dead.

BUILD OWN ROADS IS STYLE OUT IN KANSAS

Hundreds of Farmers and Others Make the Dirt Fly.

WOMEN SUPPLY LUNCH

Long Stretch of Good Highway Completed in One Day When Residents Get Busy—Better Results Than Waiting for Bond Issue.

Road making is an important matter anywhere you go. Methods pursued out West, however, differ radically from those in the East. Particularly is this the case in Kansas. Out there when the farmers and others in a certain section make up their minds that a new road is needed they "go to it" themselves, which is more productive of quick results than campaigning for a bond issue.

The "Gazette", published at Beloit, Kansas, on April 22d pesented an interesting article telling how residents of that section pitched in and built a stretch of splendid road. The men did the work on the road, but their wives also were on the job, furnishing eatables in liberal quantities. A copy of the "Gazette" containing the article in question was received a day or two ago by D. Wagner Geiss, of Bellefonte, from his uncle, Jacob Geiss which was in part as follows:

What can be accomplished in the matter of practical good roads work was demonstrated with a vengeance yesterday (Weduesday) on the road leading into Beloit from the south. This stretch has long been one of the worst roads in the county on account of its being low and sandy but it will henceforth for years be one of the very best pieces. Several other things were equally clearly demonstrated at the same time: one of these is what a good live business men's organization can do for a town and community when they work together and put forth the proper energy, and another is that the farmers are not slow in co-operating with any effort which is for the mutual benefit of the town and country and still another fact was again demonstrated, that the women of Beloit are just as capable of tackling the big things and carrying them to a successful conclusion as are the men.

When the Business Men's Club proposed to hold a Good Roads Day and began to organize the forces, they expected to be able to secure about 150 teams and two or three hundred shovelers and fixed the maximum accomplishment at being able to haul 1000 loads of shale from the Charles Wendell quarries two miles south of Beloit and cover a 20-ft road 6 inches in depth for a distant of about half a mile. Instead they had 209 teams actually hauling shale besides a number of other teams doing other work and four or five hundred men shoveling in the quarry and leveling the road. 1,800 loads of shale were deposited on the road and the distance covered was nearly three-quarters of a mile.

It is safe to say that there was never such a sight in this portion of the state. These teams lined the road from 7 o'clock in the morning until 6 in the evening and the organization both at the dumping end of the line and the quarry was so perfect that there was the minimum of delay all along the line. Most of the teams made nine trips and it is possible that a few hauled the tenth load. By noon the wind had risen until the road was a cloud of dust during the afternoon but the men had come out to work and didn't propose to let a little dust retard them. By night it required a second look to be able to recognize most of the teamsters.

Farmers came from ten to fifteen miles to help in the work. They worked along side of business men, clerks, preachers, lawyers, bankers and doctors. It was really surprising how well the shovelers held out during the day. While most of them are feeling the effects of the day's exertion today, yet we have heard of none over-doing their strength to the extent of suffering any serious effects. It was a jolly crowd and notwithstanding the fact that it was a new deal to most of the men, they really seemed to enjoy the experience and very few left the quarries until the hour for quitting arrived.

The Business Men's Club gained a reputation for feeding a crowd, when it fed 12,000 people at the big barbecue last fall and really got the idea that they knew about all there was to know along that line, but as they needed the men for other duties this time, they requested the Woman's Commercial Club to take charge of the serving of the dinner at the N. H. White farm which was about midway between the loading and unloading ends of the work. The Woman's Commercial Club, while they organized the work and took the lead, at once interested all the women of Beloit in the big task. The women fully demonstrated that they needed no suggestions from the men when it came to handling the feeding proposition. They asked all who would bake pies to do so and leave them at Mrs. Beil's store and the pies rolled in so fast that it took all the bakery wagons in town to haul them out to the place for serving. There were over 600 pies donated and after having an abundance to serve the dinner they still had enough left to serve pies sandwiches to the men in the middle of the afternoon which was most acceptable to them. Baked beans, roast beef, hot potatoes, gravy, pickles, coffee and cigars made up the balance of the bill of fare and it was all prepared and served in a most palatable manner. The men were served in relays so that there was no complete stoppage of the work from the time it started in the morning until the whistle blew in the evening.

The district court which convened Monday adjourned for the afternoon in order to give the courthouse officials, local bar, and any jurors and witnesses who so desired an opportunity to participate in the work.

"Go-to-Church Sunday."

Sabbath, May 3d., has been set by the Ministerium to be observed as Go-to-Church Sunday. This is localizing a movement which is sweeping the country. Our neighbor Williamsport, for instance, is celebrating the same day in like manner. The churches there are attempting the thing we are trying, GET EVERY PERSON TO ATTEND THE CHURCH OF HIS PREFERENCE on that day. Every man, woman and child of church going age, is urgently asked and invited to attend as many services of his church as possible. Persons who are not members, and persons who are members, are all included in the invitation. Go to some church.

This movement has the hearty co-operation of all ministers. Father McArdle has joined with us. So the movement is general. Every preacher wants to see his church filled. Remember the date, Sunday May 3d.

Church going is an interesting question of figures. Actual counts, and not mere guesses, show that a considerable part of any community's population is absent from the regular services. Bellefonte has churches with a seating capacity of about 2500. The total church membership of the town is about the same. That leaves about as many more—many of whom are children who are not members of any church, though many are adherents. The person who doesn't give the matter attention might think that the churches should have audiences that would equal their membership. Not so. Take the matter the year around and the attendance is probably not much over 55%. The purpose of Go-to-church Sunday is to take up some of this slack for one day at least. East St. Louis, for instance, with a population of 72,000 had about 60,000 people in its services. Will Bellefonte have 4,000 people at church? That can be answered by the reader of this communication.

G. E. HAWES, President of the Ministerium.

Send Troops to Colorado.

President Wilson on Tuesday ordered five troops of cavalry sent to Colorado to quell the disturbance resulting from the long-standing strike in that State. This was done at the request of Governor Ammons, of Colorado. The Colorado State militia proved to be particularly offensive to the strikers owing to the presence as members of many former mine guards. President Wilson in a proclamation gives the strikers until tonight to return peacably to their homes. The presence of the federal troopers is welcomed by the strikers.

On Hike to California.

Fred. Barrett, Charles Feight, Floyd McAtee and A. L. Raymond, four well known young men of Clearfield, expect to start Friday to walk across the continent to San Francisco, and hope to reach there in time to take in the Panama canal exposition opening.

Sentenced to Death Chair.

Geremia Acitello, of Madera, convicted of the murder of Guido Iaquitta, of the former place, was on Monday sentenced by Judge Bell at Clearfield to be electrocuted at such time as the Governor may designate.

203 Miners Entombed.

Despatches from Eccles, West Virginia, state that as a result of a mine explosion 203 miners are entombed in two burning mines. Fifty-nine other miners were rescued. Both mines are reported to be burning fiercely.

OUT FOR JUDGESHIP ON NO-LICENSE PLATFORM

Clement Dale Aspires to Succeed Judge Orvis Next Year.

LICENSES HIS ISSUE

Says that in Thirty-six Years as Member of Bar He Never Handled an Application for License—Is First Aspirant in Field.

Clement Dale, Esq., has announced that he will be a candidate for Judge of the Centre County Courts next year and that he will wage his campaign on a no-license platform.

That Mr. Dale contemplated being a candidate to succeed Judge Orvis has been known for some time past. That he might be a candidate on a straightforward no-license platform has been surmised by intimate friends familiar with his views on the subject. In fact, it has been a matter of common report for some weeks past that he had made up his mind to go after the Judgeship and make it an issue that if elected no liquor licenses would be granted in Centre County.

"The Republican" this week submitted the matter of these reports to Mr. Dale and asked him for a frank statement in reply.

"I am a candidate for Judge", said Mr. Dale.

"Are you a candidate on a no-license platform?" was asked. To this Mr. Dale replied:

"I am a candidate for Judge and stand on a no-license platform. In the thirty-six years I have been at the bar I have never handled a liquor license application. I have had many opportunities to do so but always have refused. I believe that the whole system is wrong."

PERSONAL PROPERTY SALE

Furnace Plant Locomotives and Other Things Hammered Down by Sheriff.

Anybody looking for bargain prices on some big railroad locomotives, or some dinkey engines such as are used at ore mines, or a lot of other things equally useful where needed, should have attended the sale last Saturday which Sheriff Lee conducted to dispose of the personal property of the Bellefonte Furnace Co. The total proceeds of one sale, at the plant at Coleville, amounted to $215, while the sale at the Scotia mines netted $1236.

It was at the sale at Coleville that two locomotives, a lot of office furniture, laboratory equipment, etc., commanded the attractive price of $215. Apparently outsiders were not in the market for locomotives, so they were bought in by counsel representing the Welch estate, of Philadelphia, the same people who took over the real estate of the company sold by Sheriff Lee several weeks ago.

Up at Scotia the articles sold ranged from mules to mine dinkeys, rails, etc. Eight mules were disposed of, two being bought in by counsel for the Welch estate and six going to outsiders. Dr. J. M. Brockerhoff purchased two, William Burnside took two for work on his farm and fruit orchard in Purdue mountain, and William G. Runkle and H. Laird Curtin each took one. Other articles sold included two dinkey engines, a lot of mine cars, rails, harness, two excavators, etc.

Sheriff Lee will in the near future sell some additional real estate of the company nearby the plant at Coleville.

Repairing the Armory.

Beyer & Co., of Tyrone, have been awarded the contract for remodeling and repairing the Armory in Bellefonte. Mr. Beyer spent some time in town this week making plans for going ahead with the work. Lewis Wallace has been awarded the contract for the brick work. Henry Lowry secured the carpenter work, while the plumbing was alloted to Albert R. Schad. It is the intention to push the work through to early completion.

Haupt—Copenhaver.

Tuesday afternoon Charles D. Haupt and Miss Ruth Copenhaver, both of Tyrone, were united in holy bonds of wedlock by Rev. Marion J. Kline, pastor of the First Lutheran church at Altoona. After a bridal tour through Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Toronto, Philadelphia and Atlantic City, Mr. and Mrs. Haupt will reside in apartments in the Myron block at Tyrone.

HOW TO DANCE THE ONE STEP

By ODGERS T. GURNEE

Illustrated With Specially Posed Photographs

THE one step is the modern renovation of the much discussed turkey trot. In spite of the fact that both dances are often classified under the same general name, they are as different as day is from night, and it is almost an impossibility to dance one to the music of the other. The original turkey trot was performed to rather slow and tuneless music of the negro minstrel show variety, whereas the new one step demands a quick and pulsating tempo.

WRONG WAY TO HOLD THE GIRL FOR ONE STEP.

The first principle to be mastered in dancing the one step is to walk gracefully on the balls of the feet without bouncing, hopping or dipping. Others of almost as great importance are as follows:

Stand as erect as possible.

Do not wave the arms, pump the elbows or wiggle the shoulders.

Do not whirl or spin.

Bearing these things always in mind, it is a simple matter to acquire the easy, graceful swing that is a characteristic of the one step. In holding the lady do not wrap your right arm all the way around her. Rest the right hand on the middle of her back, not on her shoulders, as this tends to throw her left arm up too high.

Bend the left elbow and hold her right hand on a level with the eyes and about three inches from the head. Stand close to her, but do not hold her tightly. The prime essential of good one stepping is to make every move correspond with your partner's so that you form an unbroken line whether dancing straight ahead, dipping or going from side to side.

The first step is merely a walk in time to the music. Take steps in accordance with your partner's height. Another straightaway step that has found great favor in New York and London is the "lame duck." This is danced exactly as the name implies. The man dips on the right foot and takes the usual step with the left. The action is the same as if one leg were a few inches shorter than the other. Above all things, do not make this jerky or draggy. It must be a series of quick but billowy dips and is very attractive to watch when executed correctly.

A good step for rounding corners is taken from the tango. When nearing a corner turn the girl so that you are both facing in the same direction and standing side by side. The man's right arm should be around the girl's waist and his left and her right hand clasped in front on a line and about a foot from their heads. Take three steps forward in this position. At the end of the three steps the man must hold the step for a beat while the girl swings on her left foot and resumes the former position, being face to face.

If these steps are practiced assiduously and particular pains taken in regard to position and carriage, it will not take long to become proficient. Remember that constant practice is necessary in dancing as in everything else.

Start of the One Step

Posed by Miss Wilma Winn and Mr. Everett Evans.

THIS picture illustrates the opening step in the so called turkey trot, but what is really the one step. The girl should be held an inch or two away, and both should stand erect. If there is any lean let it be toward the girl. The dance is nothing more than a quick walk in time to the music and must be done on the balls of the feet. Hopping, bending the knees too far and shaking the shoulders and elbows are impossible. The entire movement should be from the hips.

Maxixe Step In the Trot

SEVERAL of the more recent dances, such as the Brazilian Maxixe, form the basis of some very graceful figures in the one step. In the picture is shown a Maxixe turn done to turkey trot time. The left hands are held above the head, and the right hands are clasped behind the girl's back. In this way it is possible to turn the girl completely around on the turns and reverse the position. During the turn the man stands practically still, only moving his feet enough to keep in time.

Flirtation Turn In the Hesitation

Posed by Miss Janet McIlwaine and Mr. J. J. White.

A CHARMING position from the hesitation. It is merely a series of reversals from the same basic position. Care must be taken to stand gracefully while doing the turn. Do not whirl while doing this. It is a slow and stately measure in time with the waltz. A great many dancers have a tendency to toe in badly when doing this step. It throws one off their balance and ruins all possibilities of gracefulness. The beginner should guard against it continually.

LINDSAY'S WIRELESS.

A Scotch Genius Who Anticipated the Work of Marconi.

James Bowman Lindsay, a Scotchman, began experimenting with electricity in 1820. In a few years he produced a "constant stream of light," which was the admiration of scientists. He sent messages over wires and delivered many lectures on an electric telegraph. Then in 1852 he invented a system of wireless telegraphy and submitted it to a public test, regarding which a Dundee paper of April 12, 1853, said: "The experiment removes all doubt of the practicability of Mr. Lindsay's invention, and there is every reason to think that it will soon connect continent with continent, and island with island, in one unbroken line of communication."

Lindsay's lectures were advertised under the title of "Telegraphing Without Wires," so that the familiar "wireless" itself was anticipated. But he was more than a scientific experimentalist. He projected a dictionary in fifty languages and labored on it for a quarter of a century. It was too huge a task, and the Pentecontaglossal Dictionary exists in an unfinished state only in manuscript. He also compiled with more success a set of astronomical tables for the use of chronologists.

Yet this astonishing man never enjoyed more than an income of $250 a year as a teacher until the eve of his death, when the prime minister granted him a pension of $500 "in recognition of his great learning and extraordinary attainments."—Exchange.

BRASS ROD MONEY.

Currency That Used to Be Very Popular With African Natives.

The annual "bullion letter" of Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. of London suggests that the phrase expressive of wealth, "plenty of brass," was introduced into England by sailors trading with towns at the mouths of the great African rivers, though the brass rods used by the natives are now passing into the limbo of things obsolete.

A brass rod at Momsemb was fifteen inches long and not quite so thick as a slate pencil. Everything had its price in brass rods—one egg equaled one brass rod; a fowl, ten brass rods; two yards of cloth, twenty brass rods; a male slave, 600 brass rods, and a female slave, 2,500 brass rods.

The brass for these rods was originally melted down for their brass ornaments—anklets, necklaces, armlets, leg rings, hafts of spears, paddles and handles of knives, etc. It was using the brass for this purpose that first gave it any real value to them. In 1890 the brass rods still retained their value.

It is quite possible that the rods changed hands in fathom lengths, and those who came into possession of these lengths each cut off a little piece to procure a little bit of brass for nothing, and hence the length was gradually shortened until in 1890 it was fifteen inches. The process of shortening continued, and in 1905 the standard length was only eleven inches.

Is There a "Born Criminal?"

Is it to be wondered that most authorities are inclining more and more to find in a faulty environment rather than in a bad heredity the explanation of the boy who goes wrong? Not that it is as yet possible and perhaps it never will be possible to rule out entirely the idea of the "born criminal." A small proportion of delinquents unquestionably do show almost from infancy an irresistible and seemingly instinctive impulse to evil, but to just what extent this is actually due to inherited and irremediable conditions remains to be ascertained. Medical progress, in fact, is constantly making it clearer that many supposed instances of "inmate depravity" are in reality the result of curable physical defects and sometimes of defects that are comparatively slight.—H. Addington Bruce in Century.

Turkish Smoking Pipes.

The "hookah" is a large tobacco pipe much used in Turkey, Persia and other eastern countries. It consists of two bowls, one placed over the other. The upper bowl contains the tobacco and is connected by a tube with the lower, which is partially filled with water. The connecting tube passes down into the water. The stem, which is usually a long flexible tube, is connected with the air space above the water, and thus the smoke must pass through the water before reaching the smoker. In passing through it is cooled and deprived of most of its harmful constituents.

Needless Advice.

"How are you getting on at your new place?" asked a lady of a girl whom she had recommended for a situation.

"Very well, thank you," answered the girl.

"I'm glad to hear it," said the lady. "Your employer is a very nice person, and you cannot do too much for her."

"I don't mean to, ma'am," was the innocent reply.—London Answers.

Out of His Mouth.

His youngest grandchild had managed to get possession of a primer and was trying to eat it.

"Pardon me for taking the words out of your mouth, little one," said the professor, hastily interposing.—Chicago Tribune.

Incivility.

A man has no more right to say an uncivil thing than to act one—no more right to say a rude thing to another than to knock him down.—Johnson.

James H. Rine, 239 W. High St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: Doan's Kidney Pills are certainly a wonderful kidney remedy. Ten years ago I first used them and at that time I told in a public statement of the benefit they brought. That statement still holds good. I have often urged my friends to try Doan's Kidney Pills and in every instance where my advice has been followed, relief has been had from kidney trouble. Whenever I hear anyone complaining of kidney disorders, I advise a trial of Doan's Kidney Pills, knowing that they will have a good effect."

The above statement must carry conviction to the mind of every reader. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Rine had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Must Help Support Insane.

In an opinion of the attorney general's department at Harrisburg it is declared that every county in the state that maintains its indigent insane is entitled to $2 a week state-aid. This has long been paid but under some conditions was withheld and the opinion was secured as a result. This will be a big aid to counties having their own insane institutions. The case has been watched by county authorities from all parts of the state.

The point was raised by Dr. Frank Woodbury, secretary of the committee on lunacy of the state board of public charities, and it hinges largely on a construction of state law by President Judge George Kunkel of Dauphin county. The case in question was that of the trustees of the Danville State Lunatic hospital vs. Lycoming county, tried in the Dauphin county court. In his opinion, which was sustained by the supreme court, Judge Kunkel decided that the term "indigent insane," as used in the statue providing that the state is liable for their keep to the amount of $2 per week, "is broad enough to cover all indigent insane persons, whether they be criminal or not."

TALKING AT DINNER.

A Chinese Suggestion That One Person Should Do It All.

As a rule, a dinner conversation is seldom worth remembering, which is a pity. Man, the most sensible of all animals, more readily leans to nonsense than to rational discourse. Perhaps the flow of words may be as steady as the eastward flow of the Yangtzekiang in my own country, but the memory remains only a recollection of a vague, undefined—what? The conversation, like the flavors provided by the cooks, has been evanescent.

Why should not hostesses make as much effort to stimulate the minds of their guests as they do to gratify their palates? What a boon it would be to many a bashful man sitting next to a woman with whom he has nothing in common if some public entertainer during the dinner relieved him from the necessity of always thinking as to what he should say next! How much more he could enjoy the fine dinners his hostess has provided—and as for the woman, what a number of suppressed yawns she might avoid!

To take great pains and spend large sums to provide tasty food for people who cannot enjoy it because they have to talk to one another seems a pity. Let one man talk to the crowd and leave them leisure to eat is my suggestion.—Wu Ting Fang, Late Chinese Minister to United States, in Harper's Monthly.

CLOVE APPLES.

Spicy Odored Ornaments That Were Once Quite Common.

The manufacture of clove apples, common in the days of our grandmothers, is very simple. You can take an apple, the rounder and sounder and bigger the better, and into it stick cloves as thickly as possible, with only the heads showing and forming a close continuous surface all over. Put it in a drawer or on a mantelpiece or whatnot, and time will do the rest.

The clove apple becomes dry and curiously hard, maintains its form perfectly and acquires an approximation of immortality—if carefully protected, of course, from accidents and children. The latter, if memory serves, were wont to annoy the grandmothers of clove apple days by decapitating the cloves or, if especially mischievous, by working at one of them till it came out whole. Either achievement, when discovered, as it always was soon, caused indignant oratory always and "wrong stories" not infrequently.

The exact purpose of the clove apple, whether it was valued as a curio or as the source of a pleasant, spicy odor, the present commentator does not remember, if he ever knew. In value, however, it ranked well up with the shells brought from foreign strands by seafaring husbands and sons, and both were about equally durable.—New York Times.

A Busy Man.

A customer of a large downtown tailoring establishment was getting service out of a suit of clothes he had not paid for. Statement after statement was sent to the customer and finally a letter informing the man that unless he paid his bill the matter would be put in the hands of the company's attorney. That awakened the customer. He hastened to the store and demanded to see the head of the company. He asserted the only reason for not paying the bill was that he had been so busy with other affairs that he had overlooked his debt to the tailoring company.

"Why, see here," he emphatically told the president of the company, "just to show you how busy I have been I brought this telegram along. I got that telegram day before yesterday, but I haven't had time to open it yet."—Minneapolis News.

Go to church next Sunday

Next week being "Clean-up Week", it will be a good time to clean up.

Few trout are being yanked out of the streams, but there are plenty of suckers along the shore.

Its dollars to doughnuts that Teddy is fretful away off in South America while things are doing along the Mexican border.

Now that the Democrats have no Centre Countian as a candidate for Congress there is all the more room for county pride to boost the vote for Charles H. Rowland, of Philipsburg.

The Rev. John Hewitt will not go to Congress, but at that his withdrawal from the field will save him from the sleepless nights and wearisome days which make up the life of the candidate.

The Democratic bosses in Centre County were right on the job last week seeing to it that W. H. Patterson, of Clearfield, was accorded every opportunity possible to gather up votes as a candidate for State Senator. What old debt is being paid off that the knife is out for Cronister?

How much truth is there in this persistent rumor that the Democratic bosses in Centre County are going to knife ex-Sheriff Cronister, of Martha, candidate for nomination for State Senator? Common report has it that Cronister is to be slashed right and left and every vote possible is to be delivered to W. H. Patterson, of Clearfield.

Everybody is hoping for peace, at the same time a good many are wondering how there can be mediation with Huerta whom President Wilson has been unwilling to officially recognize. As we understand it, President Wilson's plan for compromise provides for the elimination of Huerta. It is because Huerta has all along been unwilling to eliminate himself that the recent unpleasantness in Mexico was brought about.

The "Democratic Watchman" professes to be red hot in its opposition to Palmer and McCormick and at the same time equally enthusiastic in its boosting of President Wilson. Is not President Wilson the chief booster of the Palmer-McCormick slate? In other words, the "Watchman" is boosting the fellow who is boosting Palmer and McCormick.

Rev. W. M. B. Glanding, pastor of St. John's Lutheran Church, lately requested President Woodrow Wilson and Mr. John Wanamaker to send him a few written reasons for belief in attendance at Church, which he could read to the congregation at the special "Go-to Church" services on May 3d. Both these eminent laymen kindly and promptly complied. These letters will be presented next Sunday morning and evening in the Lutheran Church, corner of Allegheny and Linn Streets, and their contents will be the basis of Rev. Glanding's sermons.

DINED ON JACKALS.

But There Was Other Food the Arabs Simply Would Not Eat.

Describing the Mohammedans of Algeria in his book, "The Barbary Coast," Albert Edwards says he discovered that with the exception of the obvious difference in clothing they seemed to be very much like other men, although "they do not care for the same things—at least not for the same reasons." Of this he had a striking example during his first winter in Algeria:

"I had asked my host about the jackals which howled the night through in the brousse about his home. I was curious to know how much they resembled the coyotes of our western plains. A few days later he called me from my desk with the news that some of his Arab workmen had trapped a jackal. I followed him out into the patio and found a half dozen natives squatted about an earthen pot. Two of them were holding the animal while another skinned it. A jackal looks like nothing but a very sick and mangy dog. I can not imagine anything less appetizing. I was surprised and rather nauseated to see that the men were preparing the beast for cooking.

"'Do the natives eat these things?' I disgustedly asked my host in French.

"The man who seemed to be the chief cook understood the language of the conquerors. He looked up surlily.

"'Yes,' he growled, 'but we don't eat pig.'

"I thought of our slaughter house scandals and the doubtful cleanliness of our food supply and felt very much like the owner of a glass house who had thoughtlessly begun to throw stones."

IVORY CARVING IN CHINA.

Only Six Expert Workers In Forty Shops In Canton.

There are in Canton about forty shops which make and sell ivory articles. Each store is small, consisting usually of a showroom open to the street and a back room, where the cutting is done. Members of the store also usually work in the showroom. The industry may be divided into two stages, cutting and carving. Tusks imported from Siam constitute the raw material. These are first cut with a saw to the shape capable of being worked up by carving. The cutting apparatus consists of a wooden block or vise, a saw and a tub of water. The ivory is secured firmly by the vise, moistened with water and cut to the required shape.

Perfectly flat pieces of ivory nearly as thin as paper were shown in evidence of the skill of the cutter. The cutting finished, the blocks are then carved into shape with knives of many different shapes. These have a short blade and a long handle made of bamboo, like a penholder. Other instruments noted to be in use by the carvers were wire saws and a gimlet worked by a leather twirling apparatus.

The number of expert workers in Canton is far less than the number of stores, being only about six in number. An expert carver seldom works in the shop which employs him. He generally works in his own house and can earn about $30 Canton currency a month.—Consular Reports.

Lapping Up the Land.

Aldeburgh, which annually holds its feast of sprats, has run considerable risk in recent years of providing a feast for the sprats themselves. Fierce gales in the eighties and nineties did very great damage and almost completed the ruin begun by the sea that swallowed up ancient Dunwich. At one time the land went a quarter of a mile farther out to sea, and an old map preserved in the venerable Moot hall shows that the church had at least ten times more land toward the sea than it has now. The market place and the cross are among the trifles which the sea has stolen, while in 1799 eleven houses disappeared. The arms of the borough were selected with some sense of humor, "A ship in the waves of the sea, all sayles bearinge."—London Chronicle.

Police In Old Glasgow.

In the eighteenth century the whole safety and order of Glasgow, Scotland, were intrusted to the unpaid and reluctant burghers. Every citizen who was between the years of eighteen and sixty and paid a yearly rent amounting to $15 had to take his turn at guarding the city. "On touch of drum," says the writer, "the gentleman was at his post at 10 at night and strolled with weary tread and yawning gait along the Trongate and High street and up the pitch dark lanes of winter nights till 4 in the morning. After that hour the city was without a police."

Disenchanted

A Pair of Lovers Meet After an Interval of Twenty Years

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

There were four of us youngsters in Wheatfield about the same age and intimate friends. Helen Porter and I were bosom friends, and Jim MacAlester and Edward Dudley were inseparable. These two young men used to come to see Helen and me always together till a time came when we paired off, Jim and I making one couple, Ned and Helen the other.

I don't know a better way to make matches than for two girls, chums, and two fellows, chums, to form a quartet for spending their leisure hours. Almost always one of the couples will get to lovemaking, and the other will catch the infection. Jim and I caught it from Ned and Helen.

I think it was their example that set Jim and me to thinking about marriage. At any rate, Jim began to grow spoony, and I, thinking that I was not likely to do better, encouraged him. In due time he proposed, and I accepted him. At this time Ned and Helen had been engaged several months and had fixed their wedding day. But before it came round Helen was taken ill, and it was put off. Helen recovered, and another day was fixed, but this time Ned fell sick, and there was another postponement.

When Ned improved his doctor ordered him to the mountains, where he would breathe a dry air. He went out to the Rockies, to be gone a few months, at the end of which time and on his return the wedding day was to be fixed for the third time. We all went to the station to see him off. He did not wish to go any more than Helen wished to have him go. Jim consoled him till the train started, and Helen went home in the carriage with me, weeping on my shoulder as though her heart would break.

Ned wrote that he was picking up marvelously out in the mountains, and when two months had elapsed he wrote Helen to brush up her trousseau, for he would be back in a few weeks for the wedding. Poor Helen came to me with a lugubrious face about her trousseau, for the fashions had changed a couple of times since it was first made. Articles that were cut short then had since been cut long; those that had been made scant were now made full. She had bought several expensive hats, very small, and the fashion had bloomed out to enormous proportions.

I helped her prepare a new trousseau; but, alas, it, too, passed out of fashion in closets and bureau drawers. Ned, instead of coming home, wrote that he had bought a gold mine and was going to make a fortune. He had some property and put a portion of it into his gold mine and felt it necessary that he should stay where he was till the property had been placed on a paying basis.

When this next period had passed Ned turned his property into cash and put it all into his gold mine. He wrote Helen that this was necessary, because if he didn't he would lose what he had already invested.

Helen's trousseau had now been made over so many times that it would not bear any more altering, and it was fortunate she didn't try to bring it down to date, for Ned was delayed in getting his mine into shape to leave. All was going on swimmingly when a considerable flow of water was struck. A large pump must be ordered, and when it arrived it was found not to be large enough. Then there was a labor strike among the miners. And so it went on, first this trouble, then that, till finally all Ned's fortune had gone down into the big hole in the ground.

Ned wrote Helen telling her what had happened—that he had no income and would remain where he was till he had recovered what he had lost. He offered to release her from her engagement, but so far as he was concerned he would never marry any one else. When he got his affairs in proper shape to take a wife, if Helen were free, he would claim her. Meanwhile he would not blame her if she married another.

Helen replied that she felt just as Ned did about it. Her heart had been given to him and she could not if she would give it to another. If at the end of five, ten, even twenty years he claimed her he would find her ready to give herself to him.

Meanwhile Jim and I were married and getting on nicely. We regretted that our companion couple's affair had not turned out so well. I did my best to cheer Helen, and Jim wrote to encourage Ned. But the case looked hopeless to us. Ned was a long while after the collapse of his mine getting any kind of start, and when he got one it wasn't enough to marry on. Several years passed, and he felt that he and Helen had waited so long that he didn't care to marry without getting his affairs into excellent shape.

A dozen years passed, during which Ned Dudley went up and down hill a number of times, never remaining on a crest long enough to warrant—according to his own ideas—his taking a wife. He kept Helen's picture with him and never failed for a single day to look at it, for it was on his dressing case, where he could not help seeing it. And Helen did the same by him. When they parted she was a beautiful girl and Ned was one of the handsomest young men I ever met. I was frequently in Helen's room and never failed to see her lover's picture in a morocco frame standing on her dresser.

Twenty years passed while Helen was waiting for Ned to get his affairs in shape to marry her. Then one day he made up his mind that his income was sufficient for the purpose. She had said that if he came even after twenty years' absence he would find her ready to marry him. He would come east and take her back with him.

When Jim showed me a letter from Ned announcing his coming we looked at each other doubtfully. The letter contained a reference to the beautiful face that had patiently looked out upon him from his bureau for so many years. It was my belief that Ned was thinking of marrying this young girl instead of the faded, middle aged woman that she had become. Had he been with her all this while the change would have not been noticeable—at least not shocking.

Men are not as apt to grow old looking as women, and quite likely Ned had kept a youthful appearance. We did not fear Helen's being disappointed in him, only his being disappointed in her, for she looked ten years older than she was, and her face had taken on a disappointed expression. Her complexion was white; her hair was thin and streaked with gray. She was certainly not the woman a man of his age would choose for a wife. He would naturally prefer one from ten to twenty years younger.

Ned did not write her that he was coming. He wished to surprise her. So in his letter to Jim he asked him not to mention the matter to her.

"Don't you think, Jim," I said, "that we had better give him a sight of her without her knowing it? If he wishes to go no further it will be better for both of them that he should be free to go back west without making himself known."

"Right you are, my dear," Jim replied. "And I'm not sure but that we should give Helen a peep at Ned under the same conditions. I saw a man from the west the other day who knows Ned very well. He told me that Ned was not a fresh looking man at all. He was nearly bald, and what hair was left was white as snow. This gives a comparatively young man a very old appearance."

"That's fortunate. He won't be so likely to be disappointed with Helen's looks."

"He won't, eh? He will be blind to his imperfections, and she will be blind to hers."

I sighed, for I feared that Jim spoke the truth.

When Ned arrived he went straight to Jim, happy after having waited so many years at the prospect of being united with the love of his youth. Jim came home from the meeting and told me that Ned looked even older than he had been described. He had talked enthusiastically about Helen's beautiful features, the curves of her figure and all that. Jim had asked him to dinner, stating that I would be glad to tell him all about Helen, so that he might be the better prepared to meet her after their long separation.

It occurred to me to invite Helen to the house while Ned was there. I telephoned her that Jim was to have a friend with him during the evening and I would like her to come over and sit with me.

When Ned saw me it was plain that he was a bit shocked at the change in me. I saw by his expression that he was thinking whether he would see the same change in Helen. He had apparently been disposed to chat with me in the way of youngsters, such as we were when we parted—indeed, he tried, but the effort was a failure. Where, oh, where was that head of thick raven hair I had admired so much? Where the white teeth, the slender figure? And life in a rough country had roughened Ned. He was bronzed and seemed to have forgotten the king's English.

After dinner Ned and Jim smoked, I retiring to another part of the room. Helen came in, and we could both see and hear the men chatting.

"Who is that old boor over there with Jim?" asked Helen.

"Do you consider him a boor?" I asked.

"He's both disagreeable looking and speaking."

This was my experience with Helen. Jim's experience with Ned was told me later. Ned paid no attention to the lady chatting with me until Jim spoke of her as a friend of mine and a lovely woman. Then Ned gave her a glance, remarking:

"The old lady looks ready to turn up her toes, doesn't she?"

Helen went home, leaving Ned still with us. Jim then told him he had been looking on his ladylove. Ned looked astounded, disappointed, then frightened.

"Does she know I'm here?" he asked.

"No; we have kept your secret."

"Don't say anything till I tell you to."

"Mum's the word."

The next day Ned told Jim that he had received a telegram that something had gone wrong with his business and he must leave for the west at once. It would not be wise for him to renew the affair with his old love when so pressed for time. He would make another trip for the purpose.

But another trip was never made. Ned had been disenchanted. As for Helen, she was spared the pain of knowing that the man she had pronounced an old boor was the man she had so long worshiped. She still nourished her memory of him as he was in their youth.

ORIENTAL CARPETS.

Some of Those Made of Kashmir Wool Strongly Resemble Silk.

Generally speaking, the carpets of India can never excel those of Persia, as the materials used in the former are not of the same superior quality as those employed in the latter country. The wool of which many of the best carpets are manufactured is obtained from Kashmir. Sometimes carpets which are mistaken for silk are really of an extremely fine quality of wool known as "pashm." This is obtained from the goats of Kashmir and grows close to the skin, being protected by the long and coarser wool. It is as smooth and lustrous as silk and is used for the beautiful soft shawls for which Kashmir is famous.

Peculiar methods are employed by the Indian weaver in converting his original design into a textile. Instead of working from a colored drawing or diagram, the weaver has the pattern translated on paper into rows of symbols, each of which expresses the number of stitches and the color. With this written "key" in his hand the head weaver sits behind his subordinates and dictates the pattern to them, one row at a time, all through the breadth of the carpet.

These weavers—generally small boys—sit in front of the warp strings and tie in the requisite number of stitches of each color as called out to them by the reader from his ciphered scrip. These boys, who perform the actual process of weaving the pile, follow day by day the dictations of the head man, knowing nothing of the pattern they are preparing, but gradually building up in a mechanical way the carpet on the strings before them.—Argonaut.

TRIALS OF A PARSON.

Efforts of Some of His Flock to Keep Him Meek and Humble.

Do not be a parson unless you are blessed with a strong sense of humor and a thick hide, advises an English clergyman in Pearson's Weekly.

I was asked by a friend who had been offered a living near me to go and see the vicarage and church and report. I did so, and the clerk showed me round. As we neared the end he turned to me and said:

"Be you our new parson, sir, if I may make so bold?" I assured him that I was not. "I be main glad to hear that, sir," he said, with relief. "We've always had good uns so far!"

In a scattered parish I called upon an old couple about tea time. "Would you like a cup of tea?" the housewife asked. I confessed that I should like it very much. The dear old soul prepared one and kept apologizing because she had no jam or cake. I assured her that it did not matter in the least. "Well, sir," she said, brightening, "after all, 'tisn't as if you was one of them that feed high. Any one can see that."

One more. A friend of mine had got a job for a man who had been for a long time out of work. I guessed he was getting pretty shabby, so I looked up a suit—we were much of a size—and took it round. The man's wife took it, and I waited in the room, ready to be overwhelmed with thanks. She came back and said:

"My 'usband thanks you kindly, sir, but he don't hold with parson's clothes. But if you've got anything as 'd suit a man he'll have a look at it."

Too Quick.

While reporting a term of court in an outlying county a village merchant was prosecuted for "arson." It developed that the business men of the town had retained a "special prosecutor" to assist in the case. The attorney for the defendant invariably asked each witness if he had ever contributed anything toward the support of the "special prosecutor." One old man was very zealous in his efforts to convict the defendant. The attorney started to ask him the regular "contribution" question, but the witness interrupted him and gave his answer in the middle of the question, with the following result:

"Have you ever contributed anything toward the support"—

"No, sir; I never did—not a cent!"

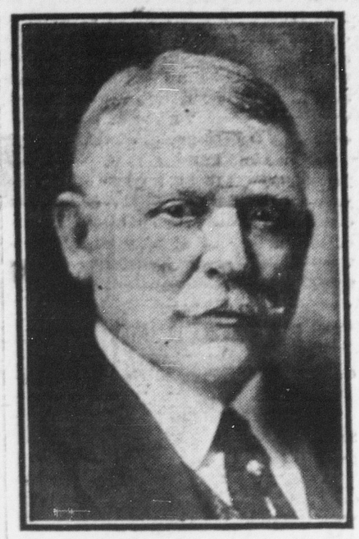
"—of your family?"

The witness was excused amid the laughter of the court, jury and audience. He left the room mad as a hornet and was heard to mutter, "I ain't got no family."—West Publishing Company.

Social Puzzle.

Why is it that a man will willingly wait a half hour for a girl to get ready for a show before they are married and then fuss because the breakfast is ten minutes late after they have been married a year or so?—Macon Telegraph.

For Justice of Supreme Court of Pennsylvania



GEORGE KUNKEL

President Judge of Dauphin County.

The Judge in all state tax cases of the past ten years.

The Judge who upheld the constitutionality of the Full Crew Law—sustained by the Supreme Court.

The Judge before whom the Capitol Graft conspirators were convicted, resulting in nearly $2,000,000 being recovered by the State.

The Supreme Court has sustained him in nine out of every ten of his decisions which have been appealed.

Six years as District Attorney—six years in the General Assembly—ten years on the Dauphin County Bench.

His absolute fairness as a Judge resulted in his re-election last year without a vote against him.

Blanchard.

Heber Huntington, of Marsh Creek, several days ago had hard luck when he happened to get his right hand too far into a cutting box. Fortunately he escaped without the loss of any fingers, although he sustained a gash in the back of the hand which severed a leader. Dr. Tibbins, of Beech Creek, dressed the wound.

Considerable rivalry has developed in the contest for the Blanchard postmastership. The contestants are Milton C. Kunes, the present incumbent who has served very faithfully for a number of years, and Milford Gardner. Both took the Civil Service examination at Bellefonte on April 18th and now they are waiting for some word from Washington as to the result. Mr. Kunes is a Republican, but never has allowed politics to interfere in the management of the postoffice. Mr. Gardner is a Democrat and is a very genial young man. A largely signed petition in favor of reappointment of Mr. Kunes has been filed by his friends. Should Mr. Gardner happen to land the appointment the postoffice will likely be removed to the store of his father-in-law, C. A. Williams.

Charles Johnson, a former resident of Blanchard, now located at State College, visited with friends here several days last week.

Some of the old soldiers hereabouts say they are ready to again shoulder a musket should their services be needed in Mexico. Such patriotic spirit is to be commended, but the old "boys" have well earned a rest from military duty, and there are plenty of younger ones to go to the front.

Fiedler.

Miss Mary Treaster, of Bellefonte, is spending some time with her sister, Mrs. Paul Winkelbleck.

Jeff Stover recently built a neat and attractive automobile shed.

Mrs. J. W. Winkelblech spent last Tuesday in Bellefonte.

Lester Cummings, of Pittsburg, is visiting with his brother, Earl, at C. S. Musser's.

Mrs. Sparr Wert is spending a week with her parents at Tusseyville.

Willian Breon and family on Sunday visited their daughter, Mrs. Roy Gensell, at Spring Mills.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Bertzes and wife Martha Stover, of Pine Creek, were entertained recently at the home of A. A. Stover.

Frank Lose recently purchased a new Ford car, and several others contemplate doing likewise.

Mrs. Edward Long Dead.

Mrs. Isabella Long, wife of Edward Long, died at her late home at Snow Shoe Interseciton on Monday morning, last, at 5 o'clock. She had been in poor health for about six weeks, but her illness became critical only on the day prior to her death. Funeral services were held today at one o'clock, conducted by Rev. Mr. Ziegler. Interment was made at the Stover cemetery. Deceased was aged 73 years. Surviving are her husband and these children: Etta, residing in California; Albert, located near Pittsburgh, and Aaron, of Juniata. Surviving also is a stepdaughter, Mrs. Andrew Young, of Bellefonte.

A Check With a History.

A curious souvenir is preserved in the Bank of England in the shape of a note for £1,000 with which Admiral Lord Cochrane paid his fine when he was falsely accused of spreading with an interested object a rumor that Bonaparte was dead in 1814 so as to cause a rise in the price of stocks. The sum mentioned was raised in subscriptions of a penny by his Westminster constituents. The note is indorsed with the name of the intrepid but ill used salt and has inscribed on it a sentence in which he expresses the hope that one day he will prove his innocence and triumph over his accusers. That consummation was not effected until eighteen years later, when he was reinstated by William IV.—London Telegraph.

An Anticlimax.

Sir Henry Irving was frequently a victim to the interjections of gallery gods. When playing "Macbeth" one night he had reached that dramatic moment in the banquet scene when in dreadful fear he bids the ghost of Banquo to vanish:

Hence, horrible shadow!
Unreal mockery, hence!

he exclaimed and, shuddering convulsively, dropped to his knees, covering his face with his robe. As the ghost vanished a shrill voice in the gallery broke the momentary silence, "It's all right now, 'Enery; he's gone!"—London Mail.

LURING A LANCEHEAD.

Presence of Mind In Dealing With a Deadly Serpent.

In a French paper is told a curious serpent story, the scene of which was the island of Martinique and the dramatis personae Sergeant Legrand and Private Durand and the snake a deadly lancehead.

The soldier had been punished with a night in the cells for some trivial offense, but as the night was very hot the sergeant had left the door open. In the morning at 5 o'clock Legrand went to wake his prisoner and, to his horror, beheld a lancehead snake coiled up and fast asleep on the man's breast.

The sergeant did not lose his presence of mind. He stole noiselessly away, ran to the guard room and, followed by all the men on duty, returned to the cell with a bowl of milk and a tin whistle. Placing the bowl of milk at the entrance to the cell, the sergeant began to play the "Blue Danube." It is needless to remark that the weakness of the lancehead is milk and music. The serpent, which was a six foot specimen, awoke, glided from the soldier's body toward the bowl, but it had no sooner buried its head in its beloved drink than ten cudgels descended on it with terrific force, killing it outright.

The soldier, Durand, who was in a swoon, was taken to hospital, where he lay for many days on the verge of madness. He finally recovered and related his horrible experience—how he had awoke in the middle of the night as the serpent was coiling itself on his bare breast and how he had lain there in an agony for hours, not daring to move a muscle.

HUNTING THE CHINCHILLA.

Andean Natives Use Trained Dogs or a Sort of Weasel.

High up on the eastern slope of the Andes, in sections of Peru, Bolivia and Chile, the chinchilla has its habitat. Living at an elevation from 8,000 to 12,000 feet above the level of the sea, its chilly home is responsible for its thick, warm coat and also largely for the exorbitant price it brings. Such coats are hard to get and not plentiful, therefore they are wanted.

"It is a hopping rodent mammal," writes W. A. Reid of the chinchilla in the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union, "somewhat resembling our common squirrel, and when standing upon its hind legs, as it does when eating, the similarity is even more noticeable. Ordinarily the body of the animal is about ten inches in length, exclusive of the tail. It is covered with a gray fur, soft and silky, which on the sides is about an inch long.

"Chinchillas burrow in the ground and live together in villages, like our prairie dogs. The natives of the Andean regions hunt them with trained dogs or with grisons. What is a grison? The South American cousin to our weasel and just about as cunning, and he easily slips into the rocky crevices, where the chinchilla seeks to hide, and captures it.

"Since the fur of the chinchilla was first introduced into Europe during the earlier part of the nineteenth century the price of the skins has soared until a lady's muff and collar of only medium size made of this material command a price of $500 or more."

Printing Office Dialogues.

There must be some amusing conversations in a newspaper composing room, according to a young man who works in a printing office and who declares that dialogues like the following are of frequent occurrence:

Foreman of the Office—Brown, what are you doing now?

Compositor—I'm finishing "Setting a House on Fire;" most done.

Foreman—What's Jones about?

Compositor—He's finishing that "Awful Murder."

Foreman—Tell him to hurry it up and take hold of this "Runaway Horse." Morse, what have you on hand?

Morse—"Solid Men of Boston."

Foreman—Well, be sure and put them in small caps and then get busy with "A Warm Winter."—Youth's Companion.

Pleasant Old Customs.

Hospital patients of today are better off than their ancestors of "the good old times." Mr. Wheatley in his book on "London" quotes from a Scottish act of parliament of 1386 to the effect that "gif ony man brings to the market corrupt swine or salmond to be sauld, they sall be taken by the baillie, and incontinent, without ony question, sall be sent to the leper folks," and if there be no lepers then only "sall they be destroyed utterlie." The same pleasant custom obtained in Oxford in the fifteenth century, where all putrid meat and fish was by statute sent to St. John's hospital.

A New One For Him.

"The climate here is salubrious, isn't it?" remarked the tourist.

"Say, friend," replied the native, "jest write that there word down fur me, will yer? I git tired o' swearin' at this climate in the same old way. That's a new one."—Philadelphia Press.

Noblesse Oblige.

Her Father—You are wealthy enough and have a good reputation, but is your family equal to mine? Her Suitor—Well, we've had eight generations of gout!—Philadelphia Ledger.

Put Her Out.

He—I know an exceedingly fastidious man who caught his wife smoking and put her out at once. She—The brute! He—Not at all—she was on fire!

Terence O'Grady's Ruse

How He Saved His Head From the Block

By NORA O'NEILL

When James II. was king of England he would have liked to re-establish the Catholic religion, but he was driven out, William and Mary coming over from Holland to sit on his throne. Ireland, being largely Catholic, supported James, but the English people having become almost exclusively Protestant, though the Catholic Stuarts made several attempts to regain a scepter to which by right of inheritance they were entitled, the Protestant Hanoverian kings became a fixture and sit on the throne of England, Ireland and Scotland today.

Terence O'Grady's grandfather or some one away back in the line was a younger son, and Terence was not especially blessed with this world's goods. Being born a gentleman, he had little taste for hard work, and this gave him abundance of time to get into mischief. He was always seen on the turf when a race was on and, being an excellent judge of a horse, knew how to place what money he had for a stake and always won. He had also a great talent for games and rarely sat down to cards that he did not get up a trifle richer.

Terence was generous to a fault, and, no matter how flat was his pocketbook, he would divide with a friend in need. He was very popular with men, and there was scarcely a girl within a hundred miles of where he lived but was in love with him. Indeed, all the girls roundabout had a chance to make his acquaintance, for, poor as he was, he owned one of the fleetest as well as one of the most enduring mares in Ireland, and instead of staying quietly at home he was constantly flying about, never coming from a foray without bringing with him a new heart—not that he tried to influence the girls in his favor, but there was something about him that drew them to him as flies are drawn to sugar.

There was one girl, Kitty O'Neill, on whom Terence lavished all his bountiful affection. Kitty lived at Ballingarry, a long way from Terence's home, but that didn't matter as long as he owned Bess and would rather be in the saddle than anywhere else except sparking Kitty. The eighty miles that separated them was no barrier between their loving hearts, and Terence visited his ladylove frequently. Indeed, when inquiry was made for him the usual reply was, "You'll either find him on the road to Miss O'Neill's or with her."

O'Grady and his Bess were known everywhere. Many a time she saved him from the sheriff when that officer came down on him too suddenly for him to raise money to pay a debt. The way he came to own the mare was this: In a certain race Michael Donoghue, a frequenter of the turf, who had no end of money, told Terence that if he would name the winner he would reward him with the horse. Terence named Bess. Donoghue won £1,000 on the race, bought Bess for £500 and gave her to Terence. Her new owner entered her for several races and won enough money to set him well up, but he either spent it or gave it away. So in the end he had nothing left but the mare.

Terence was not caught in anything treasonable, always lighting on his feet like a cat after being thrown in the air, till one day a Scotchman, Alexander MacDougall, came to Ireland and stopped awhile in the County Tipperary, where Terence lived. No one could find out what was MacDougall's business or what brought him to Ireland. Then came reports from over the Irish channel that Prince Charlie had come from France, landed on the Scotch coast at the head of a considerable force and, marching toward London, was being joined as he proceeded by the Scotch clans.

It was known to the English government that emissaries had been sent to Ireland to rouse the people to assist Prince Charlie to regain his throne and that MacDougall was one of them. But while the sympathies of the Irish were with the prince there was no nucleus in Ireland about which to gather, and no movement was made in his favor. This was fortunate, for at the battle of Culloden the Stuart forces were routed by the Duke of Cumberland's army, and there followed a series of executions that drained Scotland of her best blood.

While these things were in progress Terence O'Grady, who was in favor of the movement to put Prince Charlie on the throne of England, was as sure to get himself into trouble as a frog is to jump from a log into the water and was in constant conference with MacDougall. One Hugh Handiside had been sent out by George II. from London to keep an eye on the Scotchman and nip in the bud any effort he might make in behalf of the prince. MacDougall soon got Terence under his influence, and the two were in constant secret communication. Handiside soon became aware of this, but was unable to gain any proof of it. There was no rebellion in Ireland, and the Englishman had been instructed to act within the law or not at all, for the government did not wish to inflame the smoldering sympathy with the Scotch movement.

However, Handiside kept a watch on the house where MacDougall was lodged day and night. One evening, just before dark, he saw O'Grady enter the house. He was admitted by MacDougall, and the door closed. In a few minutes a light appeared in a room on the second floor of the house, and Handiside knew that there would be a political conference between the two men. Handiside had found one person in the place who was an enemy of O'Grady, a man of the name of Rafferty, whom O'Grady had cuffed for rudeness to a woman. Handiside went after Rafferty and told him to come with him. On nearing MacDougall's house Handiside pointed out an apple tree growing near the window where the two conspirators were deliberating and told him to climb it, look in at the window and see what he could to fix treason on O'Grady.

Rafferty climbed the tree, found the sash lifted and heard O'Grady propose to raise a hundred men in the county to aid the cause of Prince Charlie. But Rafferty's presence was made known to the man within by the breaking of a branch. O'Grady thrust a candle from the window and saw his enemy. He did not know that Handiside had instructed the spying, but he knew that he would be arrested and tried for treason. And since it was well known that the government was hunting for some one to make an example of he would probably lose his head.

Something must be done to counteract the evidence that had been obtained against him. But what could be done? As soon as Handiside could swear out a warrant against him Terence would be arrested. Fortunately no court would sit till morning, and no warrant could be obtained till then. Terence had many friends who would have hidden him, but such a plan would be a mere makeshift, and for the present he would be obliged to continue in hiding indefinitely.

In times requiring quick action we not unnaturally turn to that with which we are familiar. Leaving MacDougall, Terence went by a roundabout way to the stable where he kept Bess and, mounting, set out for Ballingarry.

It was 10 o'clock when he started, but for half the night he had the moon to light the way, and fortunately Bess had not been out of the stable for a day and a half. She went off like a shot, knowing by the prick of the spur and the touch of the whip that quick work was required. It was not only quick work, but endurance, that was needed to save her master's life. While on the way Terence thought that he might better make for the coast and escape in that way; but, considering the times, he feared that the shore would be guarded and flight would be an acknowledgment of the truth of the accusation that would be brought against him. So he kept on his course.

He had eighty miles to go, but it might not be necessary for Bess to do it all. She did twenty miles when Terence gave her water and half an hour's rest. Then she did twenty miles more, but in much slower time. After another rest she did ten miles, when Terence, coming to a barn at 3 o'clock in the morning, borrowed a horse of a farmer whom he awakened, explaining his necessity and leaving Bess as security.

At a quarter to 6 he rode into Ballingarry, and since it was Sunday he found the people already turning out for early mass. Leaving his horse at a stable, he went to the church and after mass asked for a few words with the priest. He was taken into the pastor's private room, and he handed the father a guinea as an offering to the poor of the parish. He hoped by this to fix the fact on the priest's mind that he had been at early mass on Sunday morning.

Terence breakfasted with Kitty O'Neill and told her of the ruse by which he hoped to save his head. He remained at Ballingarry all day and that night. The next morning he made his way back home, picking up Bess and riding leisurely into town during the evening. Handiside was watching for him, and as soon as he appeared he was arrested under a king's warrant and thrown into jail.

Terence was not tried till the rebellion had failed and the government had begun sending those who had been concerned in it to the block. Then he was arraigned for treason to his majesty George II., king of England, in conspiring on a certain night to incite and take part in rebellion. MacDougall had fled, and the only possible evidence against O'Grady was that of Rafferty, who swore that on the evening of the 25th of April from the branches of a tree he had seen the prisoner through an open window and heard him tell MacDougall that he would furnish a hundred men to aid in placing Prince Charlie on the British throne.

O'Grady's counsel sent to Ballingarry for the priest who had seen his client at early mass on Sunday morning, April 26, and received a guinea for the poor of the parish. Kitty O'Neill also gave her evidence as well as several other persons who had seen Terence at mass. It was admitted that he would not have been likely to be in one place between 9 and 10 o'clock at night and in another eighty miles distant at 6 o'clock the next morning. So the case fell to the ground, the government released the prisoner, and, Ireland not having taken any part in the rebellion, there were no further prosecutions.

Not long after this Kitty O'Neill inherited some land from a relative. She and Terence O'Grady were married and settled down, Terence giving her charge of all their funds. She had a hard time with him for awhile to keep him from getting into debt, but finally he became used to the new regime, and they got on swimmingly.

THE GREEN SATIN COAT

And All It Meant to Two Girls

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"An express package for you, Nell," cried Grace Lane as she met her friend at the door of the room they occupied together. "Do hurry and open it. I'm dying to see what it contains. It must be precious," she rattled on, "because it's registered and stamped with all sorts of odd foreign characters."

Nellie Hilyer laughed as she tossed her hat and jacket on the bed and carried the interesting package to the window.

"It's from my Uncle Dan. You remember, Grace. I've told you about him—how he has lived for many years in China and is as rich as rich can be."

Miss Lane nodded her golden head and frowned. "Yes; I've heard all about your rich Uncle Daniel, and I think he's a stingy old thing. Nell—so there! If he wasn't he wouldn't permit his niece to wither away in this perfectly respectable but terribly gloomy boarding house or to continue the nerve racking occupation of teaching grimy youngsters their A B C's."

"What would you have him do, Grace?" smiled Nell.

"I would have him send you a perfectly enormous draft on New York, enough to enable you to buy a rose bowered cottage in the country and to raise chickens for the market. And, Nell, I could go and live with you and be your right hand man. Wouldn't it be great?"

Nellie sighed profoundly.

"It would be lovely, Grace, but I'm afraid he won't do a thing. You see, he quarreled with my mother years ago because she married my father, and we never heard a word from him for years and years. Then mother died, and still never a word from Uncle Dan. After father's death, a year ago, you know I was left entirely alone and quite poor—those long illnesses simply devoured the money—and now it seems Uncle Dan has remembered my birthday after all." She looked dreamily down into the grubby back yard of the city block.

Grace jumped up and pulled down the yellow window shades and lighted the gas jet.

"Now that he has remembered, dear, suppose you open it and see what it contains," she urged. "Perhaps he has sent you the rose bowered cottage after all."

Nellie untied the heavy cord that bound the package and broke the red seals that splotched it here and there. When the outer paper was removed she found that there was layer after layer of oiled yellow paper, and at last there was revealed a flat box covered with brocaded silk. The silk covered box was tied with golden cords, and when these were removed the lifted cover brought to light a most wonderful garment of green satin, stiff with embroidery and glistening with gold thread.

Nellie held it up for her friend to see. "A mandarin's coat," she said with a little choke in her voice. "Isn't it wonderful?"

Grace was examining the coat with critical eyes. On the broad back of the garment was embroidered a garden scene, and the fronts were equally splendid. On either flowing sleeve there blazed a golden sun, and as she twitched one of the sleeves aside there sounded a faint crackle from its voluminous folds.

She plunged her hand into the pocket-like cavity and drew out a rice paper envelope addressed to "Miss Nellie Hilyer."

Nellie opened the envelope and took out a thin sheet of rice paper. Across the top of the sheet her uncle Dan had written a few words: "To Nellie, on her twenty-second birthday, from Uncle Dan." Then he had added: "Below is a fairly good sample of Chinese poetry. Are you fond of poetry?"

Grace read the poem aloud:

"The day is fair, like other days.
I stroll in my garden.
Through rose bordered paths I stray,
Seeking always for happiness and peace of mind.
At last I walk straight into the heart of the sun dragon—
I am swallowed up and turned into a glowing jewel of delight!"

"How odd!" commented Grace when she had finished. "It is without rime or meter, and"—

"But not without meaning!" interrupted Nellie excitedly. "Look, Grace." She pointed at the outspread mandarin's coat that was on the bed before them. "I've been looking at that. I really think the poem applies to this garden scene on the back of the coat!"

"Fiddle-de-dee!" scoffed Miss Lane as she knelt beside her friend before the green satin coat. "I never yet saw the Chinese poem that ever appeared to express anything save the utter topsyturvyness of that upside down land."

"Read the poem again while I trace out the story," urged Nellie, her finger on the beginning of the embroidered brown path that trickled over the green satin garden.

Grace laughed and obeyed. It was rather fun to indulge in these pretty fancies after a hard day's work in the schoolroom.

"'The day is fair, like other days,'" she began.

"See, Grace? The sun is shining. That shows that the day is fair," interrupted Nellie eagerly. "Strolling up this brown path—see, my finger travels through the rose bordered paths—seeking for happiness and peace of mind. Those are represented by the lotus blossoms away off on another path. He misses the turning and goes on, on, straight toward the sun dragon. The brown path goes right into the heart of the sun, and my stroller is swallowed up in the heart of the sun. Greedy fellow! He must have a hard heart, Grace." She laughed as her pretty finger prodded the gold embroidered planet.

"That's because you're turned into a glowing jewel of delight," retorted her friend gayly.

"I wish it were a glowing jewel of delight instead of a very ordinary sun," sighed Nellie as she arose and folded up the gorgeous coat. "There's the supper bell, and I am so untidy! Do let's hurry or we won't get a bite to eat."

After supper it was a long, dull evening. Though both of the girls were apparently reading, each one of them was thinking of the beautiful green satin coat and how utterly useless it all was under the present circumstances.

Nellie carried her sober thoughts to bed with her, and for many hours she lay awake, wondering why Uncle Dan had sent her such an absurd gift when he knew that she was obliged to work for her living and that the mandarin's coat must be an extravagant accessory to her simple wardrobe.

"I can't understand it," she murmured sleepily. "Mother always said that Uncle Dan was eccentric, but she said he was hard headed, practical and scorned useless extravagance, so— Oh, I wonder, I wonder!"

Now she was wide awake and sitting up in bed. In a second her feet were on the floor and she was pulling the mandarin's coat from its place in her dresser. She pulled down the shades and lighted the gas. Grace sat up in bed and stared dazedly at her friend.

"What is the matter?" she demanded drowsily. "Are you crazy, Nellie Hilyer?"

Nellie turned her head away from the blazing sun, at which she was daintily snipping with her embroidery scissors. Her face was pink with excitement, and her eyes shone.

"Grace Lane, I believe there really is a jewel hidden under this embroidery," she cried eagerly.

Miss Lane opened her blue eyes wide and yawned. Then she hopped out of bed and sat down on the floor beside Nellie.

Out of the raised interior of the embroidered sun there rolled a large stone that caught the sordid gaslight and reflected it in javelin points of flame. Now it glowed redly, palpitating; now it was a still, crimson pool of flame. It was as large as a hazelnut.

"It is a ruby!" gasped Grace faintly.

"It certainly isn't glass," admitted Nellie. "So the poem did have a meaning after all, Grace. Isn't it wonderful? Uncle Dan was trying to see if I was clever enough to read the story on the back of the coat. Grace, do you know what this ruby represents?"

Grace nodded cheerfully.

"Vine wreathed cottage—chickens—pony cart—everything that we've dreamed about and never really expected to come true!"

Nellie was looking thoughtfully at the mandarin's coat. She turned it over and examined the blazing suns on the sleeves and on either front of the garment.

"Grace," she said quietly, "there are four smaller reproductions of the garden of roses, and in each blazing sun I believe we will find another jewel!"

"Let us get to work, then," cried Grace, fetching her own scissors.

The hands of the little alarm clock on the bureau pointed to 3 a. m. when the last blazing sun was despoiled of its jeweled heart.

The sleeves had given up two enormous pearls of great luster, and the fronts had contributed two blazing diamonds.

"I take back everything I ever said about your Uncle Dan," quavered Grace Lane as she went to bed with the gems hidden under the pillow. "He's a dear!"

"I think I'll say a prayer for him," murmured Nellie from the depths of a grateful heart.

Without a word Grace slipped from the bed and knelt beside her.

* * * * * * *

In faraway China an elderly man was dreaming of his home country, from which he had alienated himself for many years.

He was thinking of the secret contained in the green satin mandarin coat which he had sent to his unseen niece in New York.

"If she's clever enough to read the secret she will write me a letter of thanks, and if the letter is the sort of letter that shows her to be my sister Eve's daughter in disposition, why, I'm going home to spend the rest of my days with her."

One day the letter came, and it was the right kind of letter, for Daniel Drake severed his connections in the orient and took the first steamer for home, and when he arrived there he found the rose covered cottage and his niece, as well as another glowing young specimen of young womanhood, who was also willing to be adopted into his family. The green satin coat has been made into a beautiful screen, and it is one of Nellie's most precious possessions.

"It not only lifted us from poverty," she told her adopted cousin, Grace, "but it really brought Uncle Dan to me. And while one can get along without a whole lot of money it's nice to have some own folks belonging to you."

Napoleon and the Balloon.

When Napoleon was a young cadet he went on one occasion to witness the ascent of a balloon in the Champs de Mars. He entered, unperceived, the inclosure which contained the balloon, which was then very nearly full and about to ascend, and requested the aeronaut to allow him to enter the car. The request, however, was refused, the reason given being that the feelings of the boy might embarrass the aeronaut.

"Though I am young, I fear neither the powers of earth nor of the air!" Bonaparte is reported to have exclaimed.

On being requested to retire, the little cadet, enraged at the refusal, drew his sword and, slitting the balloon in several places, destroyed the apparatus which had been constructed with infinite labor and ingenuity.

Such was Napoleon's first and last attempt to ascend in a balloon.

Adding an auxiliary line brings business through better service

You've got to give your customers efficient, always-ready service. You can't afford to leave a stone unturned to secure it.

If your first Bell Telephone is overworked the first thing to do is to add an auxiliary line and telephone.

Your telephone is overworked when the great amount of business over the line keeps it constantly busy and prevents customers from getting to you. You can't afford this to continue, but you can afford an auxiliary line, the cost of which is comparatively small.

Call the Business Office to-day.

For Justice of Supreme Court of Pennsylvania

GEORGE KUNKEL

President Judge of Dauphin County.

The Judge in all state tax cases of the past ten years.

The Judge who upheld the constitutionality of the Full Crew Law—sustained by the Supreme Court.

The Judge before whom the Capitol Graft conspirators were convicted, resulting in nearly $2,000,000 being recovered by the State.

The Supreme Court has sustained him in nine out of every ten of his decisions which have been appealed.

Six years as District Attorney—six years in the General Assembly—ten years on the Dauphin County Bench.

His absolute fairness as a Judge resulted in his re-election last year without a vote against him.

Whether you are enrolled or not you can vote for him on the non-partisan ballot in this way:

TREASURER'S SALE OF UNSEATED LAND FOR NON PAYMENT OF TAXES FOR 1912 AND 1913.

Agreeable to the provisions of the Act of Assembly entitled "An Act directing the mode of selling unseated lands for taxes and other purposes," passed the 13th day of March, 1815, and the further supplements thereto passed the 13th day of March, 1817, the 23rd day of March, 1831, the 19th day of March, 1845 and the 30th day of March, 1897.

I, John D. Miller, Treasurer of the County of Centre, hereby give notice to all persons concerned thereon, that unless the county, road, school and poor taxes due and remaining unpaid for the years 1912 and 1913, or for any previous years, on the following described tract or parts of tracts of unseated lands, situated in said County of Centre, be paid before the day of sale, the whole or such part of each tract of said lands as will pay the taxes and costs chargeable thereon, will be exposed to public sale or outcry, at the court house in the City of Bellefonte, in said county, commencing on the second Wednesday of June next (it being the 10th day thereof) and continuing, by adjournment from day to day, until all are sold.

The Big Gunner of the Malakoff

And the Sharpshooter Who Supported Him

By F. A. MITCHEL

One of the world's greatest sieges was that of Sebastopol, which occurred in 1854-5. The fall of the fortress marked the end of the Crimean war, in which the English, the French and the Turks on one side were pitted against the Russians on the other.

It was the failure of a bluff on the part of the British ambassador at St. Petersburg that caused thousands of men to kill each other and leave a multitude of widows and orphans to mourn for them. No better argument for a world's peace parliament can be derived from any event of the nineteenth century than this diplomatic blunder.

After a good deal of fighting the Russians shut themselves up in the stronghold of Sebastopol to resist the further progress of the allies and stood one of the longest sieges in history, extending over a period of eleven months.

The allies approached the fortress by that military process which is as old as war—a system of zigzag trenches. In these trenches, in heat and cold, in wind and rain, the soldiers worked their way toward the object of their attack. From the walls the heavy guns sent iron balls to plow up the earth about them and crush those who stood in their path. On both sides the sharpshooter was ever ready to pick off any one who exposed even an infinitesimal portion of his person.

Among the guns that did the most damage to the allies was one on that part of the fortress called the Malakoff. It was an enormous piece of ordnance, which acquired a name among the Russian soldiers taken from the czar who reigned at the time, Nicholas.

THE GUNNER AND HIS PROTECTING SHARPSHOOTER.

They called the gun Old Nicholas. If it had belonged to the English the name Old Nick would have meant more than it did in Russian.

The gunner who served Old Nicholas corresponded in size to his piece. As the gun was one of the biggest in the Russian service, so was Ivan Yasnovsky, the gunner who served it, one of the biggest men in the army. He was six feet four inches high and massive in proportion. Of course he had a number of assistants, but he was plenty strong enough to put in the ponderous balls which it sent down among the trenches. And when left alone there was no diminution in the frequency of his shots.

A more important auxiliary to Ivan Yasnovsky than gun servers was the sharpshooters who when those of the enemy became too troublesome picked them off one by one until Ivan could show a bit of his person without getting a bullet in it. Half a dozen of these sharpshooters were detailed to stand by the gunner of Old Nicholas, but as the siege proceeded some of them were picked off, while others were needed at other points. At last the number was reduced to one.

This single sharpshooter was called Alexis Galieff. Though a man of middle height, beside the ponderous Ivan he looked small. He was especially marked for being beardless, and this, too, was in contrast with the gunner's bristling whiskers and mustachios. Then, too, Ivan was dark, while Alexis was light. It was remarkable how that soft blue eye of the sharpshooter would take sight at an Englishman, a Frenchman or a Turk and at a flash from his rifle the object would sink down under the blight of death.

No such execution was done by any two persons in the Russian army as by this gunner and his protecting sharpshooter. Whether it was the association under constant danger that drew them together no one knew. Certain it was that they were devoted to each other. Alexis was constantly on the watch while Ivan was busy about his gun and would warn him when he saw a puff of smoke or heard a bullet sing near. "Duck, Ivan!" he would cry, and the big man would lower himself just in time to be missed by a missile giving that sound which is musical when heard far up in the air, but terrible when its song is sung close to the ear.

One day an officer ordered Alexis to another part of the fortress, and the sharpshooter refused to leave Old Nicholas and big Ivan. The officer ordered Alexis under arrest. As he was being marched away the commander of the Malakoff came by—he was constantly going from point to point superintending the firing—and, seeing what had occurred, stopped and inquired the cause.

"The man is needed at a bastion where the French sharpshooters are picking off our men," was the reply.

"Well," replied the commander, "you will have to find some one else. This man is needed here."

So Alexis remained with his two companions, Old Nicholas and big Ivan, and after several other attempts had been made by other officers at various times to detach him had failed those who made them began to wonder why it was that the general would not permit Alexis to be taken for any other duty. One whose attempt had been thus interfered with asserted that it was because Old Nicholas was doing more damage than any gun in the fortress. Old Nicholas would be useless without Ivan, and Ivan would not live a day unprotected by Alexis. But, singularly enough, this was considered not to be the only reason why Alexis could not be taken away from his post.

One day when the general was not near an officer carried Alexis away to another part of the Malakoff and forced him to pick off some Turks who had silenced a gun by killing every gunner who attempted to serve it. Alexis rid the Russians of this pestilential nest and was permitted to return to the big gun. He found the gun cold and the gunner lying dead under it.

Alexis at the sight gasped, dropped his rifle and caught at the supports of the gun. Then he bent down and, putting his arms about his friend, moaned in agony.

There was no trouble after that in getting Alexis to go to any point where his services were required. He had but one object—to kill as many as possible of those who had killed Ivan. Whatever they were, English, French or Turks, made no difference to him. He slew them wherever he could catch sight of them. And after Ivan's death he began to keep count of the number he killed. Every time he sent a bullet into a vital part of an enemy he would put his hat on the end of his rifle, hold it up above the works and get a hole in it.

The siege went on, the allies constantly working nearer. The nearer they came the more of them fell under Alexis' bullets, for, being nearer, they were more easily distinguished. They were preparing for the final scene in the struggle, the storming of the Malakoff, and were too intent upon their work to take much care of their persons.

When a number of the allies had been killed at a single point sharpshooters would be ordered to observe whence the fire came and stop it. But Alexis was quick to see that his work had been noticed, for he was accustomed to keep continually feeling of his enemies by exposing some article to draw their fire. As soon as he held an article up on the muzzle of his rifle and a hole was made in it he knew it was time to go elsewhere.

As the siege proceeded the holes in Alexis' hat became very thick. When he went from one point to another those whom he joined began to make comments upon his headgear.

"It would make a good lantern," said one. "Why don't you put a candle in it?"

"What will you do when it is all shot away?" cried another.

"No danger of your head getting too hot," said a third.

Alexis never noticed these remarks. Indeed, there was a seriousness, a sadness about him that, so soon as the others noticed it, caused them to refrain from any further comment.

At last when the allies had approached near enough for their purpose and had finished their mining operations they blew up the walls and stormed the Malakoff. The garrison surrendered and the men marched out as prisoners of war. Among those who were in line was a woman in the dress of a Russian peasant. Perhaps in her changed dress she might not have been recognized had it not been for her sad face and hat full of bullet holes she carried in her hand. A crowd of her former companions gathered about her wonderingly.

"Who was the big gunner?" was the first question.

"My husband."

"How many holes are there in your hat?"

"A hundred and twenty-six."

"Each one a Frenchman?"

"Either a Frenchman, an Englishman or a Turk."

Alexis Galieff, or Vasilia Yasnovsky, which was her real name, returned to St. Petersburg. There the general who had commanded the Malakoff took her with him to the palace, where she was received and decorated by the czar. The general had been in the secret of her sex and knew the big gunner was her husband. The czar not only decorated her, but gave her a pension that enabled her to live comfortably for the rest of her life, and when her children grew to be men and women they were all given government positions.

Manager of Chinemen Team Talks About Interest in Game.

The big card of the baseball season for Bellefonte will be the two games to be played here with the Academy by the Chinese team of the University of Hawaii. The games are scheduled for June 10th and 11th. Sam Hop is business manager of the team, and he will at once be recalled by quite a few Bellefonters who met him when the Chinese players visited here last summer. To Professor J. R. Hughes Sam gave a number of inside points about how the Chinese team plays when on an extended trip. Most baseball clubs have two or three pitchers, at most, but the Chinese team is different in that five or six members are stars in the pitcher's box and also topnotchers in both infield and outfield. A regular schedule is followed to determine the pitcher for each day, and regardless of local conditions this is never varied. For instance, when the Chinese team visited Bellefonte last summer it so happened that the strongest pitcher on the team was in line for the game here. Had a weaker pitcher been put in it would have meant a closer and more exciting game, but Sam Hop only smiled when such a shift was suggested. He replied that the regular schedule would have to be followed to the letter, and it was. Pressed for an explanation he said that experience had taught him that changing the rotation order of pitchers created trouble in the team, excited jealousies and encouraged defeats not victories. Each pitcher, he added, had his regular place on the list and when his day arrived he pitched, and it happened that the strongest pitcher on the team was in line for the game here.

Sam and his Chinese team are now in the West and are gradually working their way toward Pennsylvania. While in Kansas City, Mo., one day last week, Sam had the satisfaction of seeing his team defeat the locals by a score of 11 to 3. After the game Sam drifted into a chat about baseball in general and the rapidly growing interest in the game in Hawaii in particular. "Chinese baseball club?" said Sam Hop in perfectly good English. "Why not? There are fifty of them in the Hawaiian Islands and when the cables bring the baseball scores to the big bulletin boards in front of the Honolulu newspaper offices, there are as many Chinese, proportionately in that eager crowd of several thousand 'bugs' as there are Americans. And nowadays, you can talk batting averages of the American leagues with a Hong Kong Chinese or a Yokahoma Jap quite as satisfactorily as you can with a man from Noo Yoik."

Sam Hop decorated his remarks with as choice a lot of baseball slang as ever came over a sportwriter's desk. Once in a while another member of the aggregation would make a suggestion couched in the same kind of a language that one would expect to hear in the Packers' Clubhouse after the game. Possibly it was a trifle more grammatical, for all of the Chinese on the team are highly educated, and most of them learned English out of a book. Their only lapses from pure English were evidently due to the American sport writers.

"I can tell you something else that may surprise you." Sam Hop continued. "Within five years the winners of the American pennants will be playing teams from the Orient for the world's championship. America started something when it permitted the world tourist baseball aggregation to depart. It girdled the globe with baseball fever, if you except Europe. The Oriental takes to baseball as a duck does to water. Long before I am an old man I expect to go to New York to see world's championship games between the American championship team and teams from China, Japan and the Philippines, with possibly team from Hawaii. We have two leagues in the islands, a college league which plays on week days and a semi professional league which plays on Saturdays and Sundays.

"It is nothing unusual to have a half dozen games going at once in Honolulu and crowds of from 3,000 to 6,000 at each of them. In these leagues are men o every race under the sun, if we excep the negro. Sometimes a baseball game looks like a congress of nations. A crowd of baseball rooters can, and sometimes does, root in as many as 16 or 17 languages.

"The Chinese team was sent to the United States by Chinese merchants of Honolulu to attract attention to the city. It is here for the advertising Honolulu gets out of the tour.

"Your American commercial clubs may think they know something about trade boosting and the advertising of cities. But where is the club, much less a mere group of merchants in any city, who would send a company of athletes on a 10,000-mile journey merely because the newspapers would mention the name of the city whenever the athletes met a rival aggregation. You will observe that the Chinese merchant of the islands appreciates the possibility of newspaper advertising, even though the newspapers rendering him that service are published a few thousand miles away.

"I believe that a good many of your American merchants would appreciate their newspapers more if they could talk to some of our Chinese merchants for a little while."

He is making as thorough a canvass as possible in the short time intervening until the primaries on May 19th and respectfully asks the influence and support of the Republican voters of Clearfield and Centre counties.

Last Saturday's scheduled baseball game between the Academy and the Bloomsburg Normal teams was postponed until Monday afternoon owing to rain. On Monday the Academy rewarded those who turned out for the game by defeating Bloomsburg, 7--6. It required ten innings to settle matters, one team, then the other, being in the lead right from the start. In the tenth the Academy put over the winning run. Montgomery for the Academy, pitched a splendid game. Tomorrow afternoon at the new field, on East Bishop street, the Academy will meet the strong Buffalo High School nine, and a battle royal is looked for. Kennedy, of whom great things is expected, has finally decided to return to the Academy and he will be in the pitcher's box at tomorrow's game. It is to be hoped that there will be a big crowd on hand. The Academy boys are going in the hole in the matter of expenses for each game played on the home grounds which, of course, would not be the case if local fans turned out in force. Admission tomorrow, 25c.

Philip F. Garbrick, of this place, who for some time past has been working in a glass factory at Kane, Pa., is in the Kane hospital as the result of an operation for appendicitis. Mrs. Garbrick received a letter from him last week in which he mentioned that he was feeling in first-class shape. An hour or two later she received a telegram summoning her to Kane, the message saying that her husband was in a most critical condition. She took the first train for Kane. On arriving there she learned that Philip had gone to work on Thursday morning, as usual, and apparently was in better health than for many weeks. About 8 o'clock that morning one of the men found him in a state of collapse and suffering intense pain. He asked to be sent home and he was accordingly removed to the local hospital for examination before starting for Bellefonte. The hospital physicians diagnosed his case as appendicitis in an advanced stage and advised that if he undertook the railroad journey he probably would die before arriving home. An immediate operation was decided upon. From Thursday until Monday the attending physicians considered his case to be hopeless, but on the latter day he took a turn for the better and since has steadily gained in strength. Dr. Kane, a well known specialist, performed the operation and it is his belief that if no complications develop Philip will soon be restored to health. Mrs. Garbrick is still with him at Kane. In letters home she speaks in praise of the kindly and hopitable attention accorded her and Mr. Garbrick. Philip's many home friends will earnestly hope that he will soon be in his old-time health.

AGED RESIDENT DEAD

Miss Eudotia Armor, 85 Years Old, Passed Away on Monday Morning.

Following an illness of almost two years Miss Eudotia Armor passed away on Wednesday morning at 7 o'clock, death thereby removing one of the oldest residents of Bellefonte. Had she lived until May 12th, next, she would have been 85 years old. Her death, in fact, breaks a circle rather remarkable for one household in the total of the ages of the several members. Miss Armor's two surviving sisters, Miss Anastatia Armor and Mrs. Amanda T. Miller are aged 83 and about 74 years, respectively, and her brother-in-law, Samuel B. Miller, is almost 76.

About two years ago Miss Eudotia Armor, who had been enjoying very good health, had the misfortune to step off a porch at her home and sustain injuries which seriously crippled her. Ever since that time she had been in a more or less helpless state, the services of a nurse being needed constantly. Nevertheless, she bore her burden with beautiful fortitude and patiently awaited the final summons to eternal rest.

The deceased was born in Bellefonte and was a daughter of the late James Armor and Ruth B. Benner, the latter being a daughter of the late General Benner. She was born in High Street at about the location of the present home of Mrs. Margaret Wilson. A devout christian woman she was an earnest, faithful member of St. John's Protestant Episcopal church, and her pastor, Rev. John Hewitt, will conduct the funeral services, which will be held from the late home Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. Interment will be made in the Union cemetery. The surviving members of the family are one brother, Monroe Armor, and the two sisters, Miss Anastatia Armor and Mrs. Amanda T. Miller.

Oscar Smith Dead.

After an illness of several months Oscar Smith died on Tuesday, April 21st, at his late home at State College. His death, while not unexpected, occasioned sincere sorrow among a host of admiring friends. The deceased was born at Pine Grove Mills, May 31, 1857, and was a son of Dr. Joseph R. and Mary Smith. He was a carriage trimmer by trade and was a man of sterling integrity. He was married to Elizabeth Steffy, who survives with one daughter, Miss Verna. Surviving also are four brothers and three sisters, as follows: William H., of Tyrone; James R. and Frank, of Pine Grove Mills; Charles, of State College; Mrs. E. F. Stover and Mrs. Shetzer, of Altoona, and Mrs. Adam Murphy, of Clearfield. The deceased was a member of State College camp, M. W. of A. That organization had charge of the funeral which was held from his late residence Friday afternoon at 1.30, the Rev. W. H. Traub and J. McK. Reiley officiating. Interment was made at Pine Grove Mills.

Philip Confer Dead.

After an illness of three weeks Philip Confer died on Sunday evening, last, at 9.30 o'clock, at his late home at Marsh Creek. Death was due to heart failure and pneumonia. Deceased was 82 years old on January 10th, last, and was born at Howard. He was a son of the late Philip Confer. Surviving to mourn his death are these children: Cristopher Confer, W. H. Confer, of Marsh Creek; Mrs. Elizabeth Shay, of Milesburg, and Mrs. Nancy Packer, of Marsh Creek. Surviving also are these brothers and sisters: Ezekiel Confer, of Curtin; Henry Confer, of Renovo, Mrs. Linn Hanley, of Clearfield; Mrs. Elizabeth Ungard, of Hagerstown, Md. Funeral services were held on Wednesday, services being conducted at the late home by Rev. S. S. Clark, of Milesburg. Interment was made in the Disciple cemetery at Romola.

Calvin Zimmerman Dead.

Calvin Zimmerman, a well known and highly esteemed resident of Milesburg, died at the Bellefonte hospital on Monday. He had been in ill health for some time but was removed to the hospital on the Tuesday preceding his death. Deceased was aged 63 years on November 17th, last, and for over 30 years was in the employ of McCoy & Linn. During the last ten years of his life he was a driver for the Milesburg Store Co. He was for many years an active consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Mr. Ash, assisted by Rev. Mr. Piper and Rev. C. C. Shuey. Surviving to mourn his death are his widow and these children: Margaret, Edward and Malcolm.

Hewitt Petition Withdrawn.

Rev. John Hewitt last Friday formally withdrew his petition filed with the State Department at Harrisburg and entering him as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Twenty-first District, comprising Centre, Clearfield, McKean and Cameron counties. His withdrawal had been forecasted in "The Republican" several weeks ago. As stated at that time, Mr. Hewitt, after entering the field as a candidate, found that certain obstacles of a purely personal character existed which precluded his being a candidate. He accordingly sent to Harrisburg an affidavit of withdrawal. The remaining candidates for the Democratic nomination are William E. Tobias of Clearfield, and Edward R. Benson, o Mt. Jewett.

Geo. F. Baer Dead.

Geo. F. Baer, for thirteen years president of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, died in Philadelphia last Sunday evening after an illness of but little more than twenty-four hours. Mr. Baer was taken ill suddenly while walking from his home to his office. He apparently had been enjoying the best of health, but an attack of acute indigestion caused him to collapse in the street and subsequently it developed that he was suffering from kidney trouble. He was about 72 years old.

Mrs. W. I. Underwood Dead.

Mrs. Anna L. Underwood, wife of William I. Underwood, of Tacony, Philadelphia, died on Friday night, April 24th. Funeral services were held on Tuesday at Mickleton, New Jersey, her former home. The deceased was aged about 53 years. There are no children. Her husband is the youngest son of the late Jesse and Susan Underwood, of Unionville.

PRACTICALLY all railroads compel their men to carry watches that are known to have a high standard of accuracy.

The Hamilton Watch

"The Railroad Timekeeper of America"

Nearly 56 per cent. of the watches on American railroads are Hamiltons.

Prices for Hamilton movements only range from $12.25 to $60.00. Hamiltons complete, from $38.50 to $125.

If you are interested in good watches, we will gladly show you our stock of Hamiltons.

Engineer Conklin of the Chicago & Alton's famous "Red Hummer" has carried a Hamilton for years.

CAUTION

LOOK BEFORE YOU ACT.

Don't pay out your hard cash until you have consulted with the leading Farmers' Supply Store, because we are at very little expense—we eat at our own table and sleep in our own bed, and can give you the benefit of the saving in traveling expenses. Of course, we cannot give goods away, and we must have a small margin in keeping with the quality of the goods.

We handle everything of the very best make, from Plows and Harrows, Grain Drills, Corn Planters, Cultivators and all of the leading tilling implements. We have the Brookville Wagons as a specialty, also Buggies on orders. Just incidentally we might mention Cutting Boxes and Corn Shellers, Plant and Garden tools. Are you interested in seeds? We have Red Clover, Mammoth Clover, Alsike Clover and Alfalfa Seed, also Field Peas, Millet and Timothy Seed. These seeds are all of the very best obtainable. Then we have Chick Grit and Charcoal, Flax Seed Meal, Metal Hog Troughs, Galvanized Water Troughs, Sprayers and Spray Materials and Seed Potatoes. Perhaps you are in need of Fertilizers. If so, just come in and get exactly what you need and want. We have a warehouse just for fertilizers alone, and it is for your accommodation. We have both phones. Telephone your wants and you'll find us on the job. Thanking you for past patronage and soliciting a fair share in the future, I remain.

Truly yours,

John G. Dubbs,

Buying Clothing on Faith

All of us Buy Clothing on Faith.

The veteran clothing man cannot tell how long a coat collar will stand up unless he cuts open the seam and examines the sewing of the stiff canvas underneath. No expert can tell whether a coat front will hold firm and true or droop like a wilted flower, unless he knows how carefully the fabric has been shrunk.

Can you afford to take a chance? We can't. For our store we buy only clothing that gives permanent satisfaction to our customers.

The universal experience of the wearer shows that Montgomery Quality clothing needs no guarantee. It is right, right from the start.

Make your selection to-day from the many beautiful styles and fabrics now in our store—and you have before you the pleasure of wearing a perfect suit of clothes.
